

The Science

Epithelial cells are packed tightly together. In our lungs and airways, the top surface of the layer of cells is exposed to the air that we breathe in and this surface is covered with many tiny hairs called cilia. The cilia push mucus and other particles along and out of our lungs.

15 mins

Let your child dip their cup stamp into the paint and print marks onto the paper.

